

Dynasty Chronicle

“A Subjective Voice in Unprecedentedly Objective Times”

Exclusively Serving the Encinitas Dynasty at the Request of the Commissioner

All information tirelessly vetted by underpaid professionals with the frequent exception that said information is entertaining and/or contributes to the intended narrative arc of the author(s). Chronicle Corp reserves the right to publish whatever the hell they desire and herein declares that no responsibility will be taken for what is published in this, or any, issue of this publication.

Pre-Draft • Thursday, August 31st, 2023

An Introduction to the 2023 Season

Her: “You’re still playing that silly game with your friends?”

Me: “Yes, babe; actually, I think I have a pretty good team this year and—”

Her: “Ha! You think I care, how rich. Let me guess, afterwards you’ll tell me all about a two-hour YouTube video you watched about scuba divers?!”

Me: “It’s called SATURATION DIVING and it’s a pretty big freaking deal welding pipelines on the ocean floor.”

By Drew Gilmore, Editor-in-Chief

Drew Gilmore has been writing for the Chronicle for as long as he can remember. Some would even say without him there’d be no Chronicle.

(Excuse the lengthy subtitle, I’m sure it doesn’t sound even remotely familiar to you, you egalitarian warrixr.) It’s that time of year, my dear league mates; the time of year to dust off the old football noggin and remind yourself that the NFL is indeed still in business (take that, Kaepernick!), and that we’ve got a draft coming up (no, babe, I can’t help your dad move the RV after Billy’s birthday party, I’VE GOT PLANS!). The buzz of what should be an exhilarating rookie draft has reached a pitch that you can no longer ignore. We all wait with desperate anticipation for the Sequoias to turn in their first pick and begin the festivities.

Of course, as we move forward, we must look back at the native country we leave before the horizon consumes it. 2022 was a remarkable year for the ED. The Village Vanguard were fortunate enough to hoist the trophy after an unprecedented NFL game cancellation in week 17, adding a new face to the winners’ regime. Gilmore was pleasantly surprised by the privileges that came with winning what many consider to be a trivial and meaningless contest as the fellow gold jacket-wearers of the ED welcomed him to their elite fraternity. First, it was major discounts on low-quality concrete work, graciously gifted by the Sequoias front office by way of an unnamed Solana Beach-based construction mogul who was owed some “favors”. Following that, it was a world-class workers’ compensation insurance policy offered free of (most) charges by Cal Roberts. You’d think a man need not much else in life (and you’d of course be right), but the luxuries did not end there; Gilmore told the Chronicle that the gift that far surpassed the rest were two tickets to Santa Fe Christian’s home opener against some Catholic school from El Centro. “It was an absolute treat” Gilmore told us. “The seats were right at the 50-yard line and I was able to rub shoulders with a lot of wealthy Rancho Santa Fe residents. I was also asked to sign some petitions about concerns over woke curriculum, so that was a plus as well; you really can’t put a price tag on something like that. Only downside was that I got a terrible sunburn; still not entirely sure why they play those games in the middle of the day AND on a Saturday no less! I guess all those Richie Rich’s don’t have to mow their own lawns or pull weeds on Saturday’s. By golly, I guess they’re right when they say you can’t buy happiness, but you can buy time. Time really is the most precious commodity we have. Someone tell that to Warren Buffet—WHO’S RICH NOW YOU OLD CROCK!" Gilmore's experience seems to confirm the adage that it pays to win, and the entire staff* here at Chronicle Corp® wish him furthered success in 2023.

Looking ahead at the 2023 season, many analysts project a competitive and exciting landscape in the ED. Gilmore hopes to continue riding the wave of elite QB play (despite some recent political headwinds which The Chronicle refuses to give any publicity to), and he's rumored to be shopping one of his prized assets (of whom he owns a dark web-sourced voodoo doll) that will mysteriously suffer a career-ending injury this season (see Trey Lance). Meanwhile, Cal, coming off a season in which he was all but assumed to repeat, still has more than enough juice to win it all (we won't mention Jonathan Taylor!). He'll surely be in the race through Week 17, and will definitely think less of the rest of you for not making it harder for him. On top of that, Cal spooked Summit participants (who didn't leave at 10pm like toothless geezers!) by hinting at a mysterious trading chip he said would "change the way the ED trades". The ominous warning served as a reminder that the rich can always find a way to get richer. Over in pony land (or whatever those bronie perverts call it) Cody is poised to be in the playoff picture again after an impressive showing in 2022. The jury is still out on whether Cody's early success in the ED is a stroke of luck dealt by the Invisible Hand or a savage indictment on the lack of success of some of his more tenured league mates—we'll let the reader come to their own conclusion—but regardless, you can expect to see Cody continue to impress in his third season. Just a stone's throw from the pony dungeon, Marcus is reportedly planning for a record-breaking year for trade volume on the heels of his new campaign framing himself as a battered trade victim (just imagine a country parading itself around the world, heralding their proud self-identification as a country who just cannot win a war, all the while poking and prodding every adversary willing to pick up the phone asking them if they'd like to engage in combat—pathetic propaganda if you ask me!). While most analysts are penciling Rethwisch in for a high finish, this writer is taking the under. Over in Leucadia—I mean, Encinitas, because Willowhaven is 100% not Leucadia—I mean, Vista, because everyone eventually becomes a suburban bum at the SFH-buying altar (put the gun down, Dave Ramsey, he put down 40% and got a 15yr mortgage because—say it with me—CASH. IS. KING!)—I mean, San Diego, because buying a house in Vista lacks the romantic allure it did 80 years ago when a hardworking guy could make a good living in the citrus industry, Jordan is doing...something other than engaging in the league discourse on Slack. Honestly, at this point, we ought to send someone over to the house. I mean, we know he's at least alive because I still see ads for Jordan Belfort's new book "The Wolf of Investing" (available for pre-order, just use the code "Orcas" at checkout for 1% off) on r/WallStreetBets, but Jordan's offseason chatter has been very "Modern Times"-era Charlie Chaplin (if the reference is lost on you, go watch a movie for crying out loud, there's more to life than Marvel and Barbie (oh yeah, I know you saw the Barbie move, and I know you told your lady how much you loved it and how you can't wait until its available at Redbox so you two can watch it again with a box of some boring candy like Red Vines or Raisinets and "analyze" it)). All that to say, Jordan's team is simultaneously interesting and boring, so it'll be interesting to see how he plays his hand this season. Kyle, likewise, will be fighting his way out of the middle of the pack as he hopes to build some reputation for the ED's satellite location in...Maryland? Virginia? District of Columbia? Have you ever looked at a map of Washington D.C.? It's basically a giant pentagram—that can't be good! Wherever Kyle happens to reside, we can at least acknowledge our collective enthusiasm for his NFL team no longer being owned by Dan Snyder, so hopefully that gust of wind can fill his sails as he sets out on his 2023 voyage.

I'd be remiss not to mention our lower class. The ED, like any capitalistic society, needs the poor to have the rich. We need the cold darkness of night to appreciate the golden sunshine of midday. We need unseasoned prison slop to appreciate a delicate glass of merlot. We need fantasy losers so that our winners have a taller pedestal from which they can look down on the world. We honor and commemorate our prole population and hope they may, one day, taste victory. The king of this esteemed class in 2022 was Carter Roberts, a man who will undoubtedly go down as the revolutionary that resurrected the public conscience pertaining to the Sacko. Don't be fooled by Carter's lowly position, he has a roster that far exceeds that of a 7th place finisher, and he has more draft picks than the entire country of Romania, Bosnia, and Turkey COMBINED. We join the populous in having high expectations for Carter to perform well this year and hoist himself into the upper class. Next, we find Noah, whose lack of passion for a redraft at this year's summit shocked everyone. Noah will certainly be making big moves this year (and I don't mean selling some Horizon pastor's $3M house). We expect Noah to have a dynasty-centric trade year that'll send ripples around the league and hopefully bring some excitement to the Cuck locker room. Further down we find Mason, whose steadiness in prior years descended into doom in 2022. Our analysts currently have Mason ranked highest on the tank index, as he has some interesting roster pieces that may fetch handsome prices as the season develops, and there have been some intriguing murmurs around the league of a potential blockbuster trade in the works (see article below). It seems as if Mason is at a critical decision point: will he slowly rebuild the old-fashioned way, or will he tear the thing down and begin scheming for a brighter future. And, at last, we've descended to the end of our list; we certainly needed more than a carbon fiber hull to get this deep. Here we find Isaac; a man shrouded in mystery. A man who tanked but also doesn't have literally the only benefit you receive from tanking, namely a number one overall draft pick, and a man who may have been dodging the ED Slack for the past six months because he was laying the groundwork for his new "wellness" business; I'm not sure where to start first. Regarding the draft pick, we've no explanation except that Isaac may have simply tanked for the love of tanking (which, it should be noted, makes him a pioneer—a madman albeit—but a pioneer, indeed). It doesn't take much fantasy insight to recognize Isaac's opportunity had he been able to use the first pick. That said, there may be some undercover plans to orchestrate a Bijan-less rebuild that'll make him a contender in years to come. Some have expressed concern about Isaac's ability to stay healthy—no, not his players, him personally. Analysts often cite his repeated orthopedic procedures as reason for doubt. Famous activist investor and short seller Bill Ackman recently opened up about his concerns that led to an undisclosed short position he took out on the Enci Elite: "It's hard to get behind a guy who always has a limb hanging in some sling" he started, "when you look at the metrics, you realize it's really hard for a guy to physically set his lineup on a mobile device when he's only got one operational arm. If you really dig into the data on a week-by-week basis, you'll find that a pretty significant majority of top finishers have both their arms available throughout the week." Ackman didn't disclose many details about his bet but did confirm it's more than the GDP of "some countries that are kind of small." Lastly, Isaac's involvement with a rumored MLM have had league members buzzing with intrigue and confusion. The shrewd finance man we all thought we knew is showing us that he may have some off-speed material up his sleeve (along with 200 cases of XS energy drinks), and we'd be wise to keep our heads on a swivel.

Alas, our league has been summarized top to bottom. If I'm sure of anything, it's that that order will look different this time next year. How different it looks...who's to say. The Invisible Hand will undoubtedly shake up our contents like Cody shakes a cocktail, or Marcus shakes the hand of yet another Sicilian "cousin", or Mason shakes his daughter when she won't sleep. However you want to picture it, we are on the eve of being cast into an arena of confusion, heartbreak, pleasant surprise, self-discovery, self-undiscovery, and—say it with me—GOOD! CLEAN! FUN!

There were several staff members who wished to abstain from wishing Gilmore good fortune of any kind citing "exploitative and inhumane" working conditions*

An Unwavering Commitment to Justice

Chronicle Corp® Releases its long-expected findings from Rethwisch-Burns trade probe

By Drew Gilmore, Editor-in-Chief

Drew Gilmore worked hard on this; harder than he'd ever care to admit.

Recently, rumors began to swirl in the deep corners of the internet about an enormous trade that had the potential to completely reorganize the ED's power structure. These claims, while wildly entertaining, felt too outrageous to be believed. As momentum continued, names began to bubble to the surface: Marcus Rethwisch, tarnished owner of the Vista Sequoias, was supposedly grooming fellow owner Mason Burns into making a monumental trade that would send shockwaves through the league. One anonymous insider familiar with the goings on of the ED hinted at this grooming beginning almost 4 years prior. Analysts began to speculate what that could look like and how it might play out, ideas of varying complexities began to circulate in chatrooms and comment sections as everyone began to highly anticipate this move. The Sequoias' stock price began to rise materially, and Chronicle Corp ® decided to break the silence with a covert probe to investigate and potentially prevent a critical act of collusion.

Their first act was hiring a private investigator to close the intelligence gap. The investigator (who was referred with high praise to Chronicle Corp ® by league member Noah May's father, Jake May) employed a myriad of methods of getting close to Rethwisch. At first, it was paying a number of unskilled laborers who were working on Marcus's house to enter the home and obtain information. One would think this to be a rock-solid plan as Rethwisch, at any given time, has at least three unskilled laborers pouring concrete somewhere on his property. However, this method proved fruitless, and the PI had to dig a bit deeper. After tailing Marcus's family for the better part of a month, the PI was able to successfully get a wire on young Benjamin, Marcus's son. From there, he was able to monitor recordings from within the Rethwisch home, hoping to discover something that could implicate Rethwisch and put this goose chase to bed. It wasn't long until he got what he wanted. The following excerpt is from a recording obtained by the PI for Chronicle Corp ®, and was believed to be from a conversation Rethwisch was having with his son:

Marcus: "Ready to go to bed Benji?"

Benjamin: "Dada. Bed"

Marcus: "Yeah buddy let's go to bed. It sure has been a loooooong day!"

Benjamin: "Day. Long"

Marcus: "Benji, do you know that your dada is a fantasy genius?"

Benjamin: "Genie?"

Marcus: "And he's about to pull off the most important and impressive trade in the history of fantasy sports?"

Benjamin: "Please. Peepee"

Marcus: "All at the expense of one of his oldest and most loyal friends, who is oblivious to the tsunami that is mounting offshore; gathering billions of gallons of power every second—"

Benjamin: "Peepee. PEEPEE"

Marcus: "They will bow to me Ben—"

Benjamin: [Inaudible screech]

Marcus: "Oh shoot you peed everywhere. Come on, Benji."

As unsettling as you may find Rethwisch's words, we ask that you rest assured in Chronicle Corp ®'s ability to pursue any and all litigation necessary to prevent any collusive behavior that will jeopardize our league.

Noteworthy Headlines

Neighbors Sue Rethwisch Over Phallic Statue Erected in Honor of First Overall Draft Pick

The solid bronze figurine was built by controversial erotic sculptor Häns Quif, known for his many contributions to the "fantasy" community. "The final straw for me was the ceaseless late-night chanting and smell of burning animals" one neighbor told The Chronicle. Several neighbors say they have reason to believe Rethwisch was performing ritual sacrifices before the statue.

Moody's Drops ED Bond Rating from B- to CCC as Inflation Gashes League Fund

"There's just not much there" one analyst told The Chronicle after highlighting the fund's buying power is currently hovering around $3 USD.

Burns Rapidly Collapses into Neutron Star When Asked to Either Support Ukraine or Name Single Rookie

Onlookers were brutally annihilated as implosion caused catastrophic gravity vortex in the parking lot of what was a Rancho Bernardo surgery center.

Menard Guarantees 2023 Success Due to Having "A Couple Dozen RB1's"

When pushed to clarify the grandiose claim, Menard refused, claiming the basis of the questions were "inherently flawed" and that the interviewers were "not asking the right questions". Menard proceeded to ask one reporter how much money he makes after reporter pointed out only 3 RB's can be started.

ED Parents Union Wins Big on Negotiations for Less Involvement, Later Event Times

An anonymous union leader told The Chronicle: "Today marks a big win for the silent majority of men who are both terrified of quitting their leagues and incapable of asking their spouse's permission to engage in a hobby".

Long-awaited ED Retreat Plans "Back to the Drawing Board" After Trip with OceanGate Expeditions Cancelled

Commissioner Gilmore found himself at a loss for ideas after his plan imploded. Under a lot of pressure to generate hype for the 2023 season, he had hoped the league's descent to the cold heart of the Earth would be a unique bonding experience with some upside for the nautical enthusiasts.

May Announces "Barbenheimer" Era for Cucks; Plans to Start Rodgers & Wilson Despite Near Impossibility of Both Scoring Points in Same Week

League insiders reported May's strange move may be a nuanced bit derived from a Haitian TikTok challenge.

Newest ED Grift? Roberts Reportedly Selling High-Premium "ACL Insurance" to Premium RB Owners

Multiple league members were promised extravagant perks in exchange for top-tier insurance packages including face time with Roberts' infamous colleague Brendon Bock.

