

Dynasty Chronicle

Thursday, September 9, 2021

The 2021 NFL season begins today. The Encinitas Dynasty will begin its 7th season on the heels of arguably its most momentous turning point to date. After the nuclear option obliterated 9 rosters at the conclusion of Marcus Rethwisch's 2020 conquest, the league turned to the almighty auction for a chance at competitive parity; a blank slate upon which would be scribed a new chapter—neigh—a new novel in the league's storied history. The brethren also accepted into its fold a new member: Cody Scheiwe. Scheiwe gained entrance to the league solely on the merits of literature and film presented by way of league application that drew much pleasure from the league's most tenured members. With ten men strong, the league arrives to a form that many say will be her truest and most pure. Let us all lift a glass as we inaugurate this new golden era of fantasy greatness.

Draft Week Headlines

Silverbacks Getting Harambe Treatment

Rethwisch Asleep at the Wheel in First Auction Draft

The same Vista Silverbacks whose recent success literally brought the league back to the stone age appeared to be on vacation while the rest of the league bid last night. It should be no surprise then that owner and operator Marcus Rethwisch, the ED's most decorated member, spent the draft in a hammock. Rethwisch was unable to get a WR2 until the 136th pick of the draft in Devante Parker. Analysts are scrambling to make sense of the roster Rethwisch curated. Some have said there is visionary prowess in the strategy, some say there is no strategy at all. One league member who wished to remain anonymous told the Chronicle that it “just didn't make sense”. Rethwisch seemed notably puzzled after purchasing Derrick Henry for $69, and again after spending $82 on tight ends shortly after. Sources close to the Chronicle have heard of rumors that Rethwisch's apparent failure is a front for a more covert and sinister operation. Some are saying Rethwisch may be acting as a metaphorical ghost-writer for friend and newcomer Cody Scheiwe. The two allegedly spend a lot of time together, and Rethwisch was Scheiwe's most vocal supporter in the application process. The Chronicle will further report as more information comes out.

Drew Gilmore – Managing Editor

Not-So-Free Market

Scheiwe Begins ED Tenure Under Investigation for Market Manipulation

New member and all-around nice guy Cody Scheiwe made waves in the early hours following Monday's draft after the SEC announced an investigation into comments made during the draft. Scheiwe is accused of market manipulation and fraud for allegedly “saying the player's pre-draft value aloud whilst said player was being bid on”. Regulators and fantasy financiers alike were appalled at the audacity to inject such fragile quantitative data into the bidding process for players of varying positions and values. Multiple league members filed complaints stating Scheiwe's actions did not make them feel safe in the draft room. The League office has assured the public that they are putting their top guys on this to ensure a thorough investigation is conducted.

Goldman Sacko – Senior Editor

Bold Predictions for 2021

ED league members were polled for their bold predictions for 2021. Here’s what curtain of the anonymity enabled them to confess:

- “Cody wins the league in his first year, defeating Noah in the championship. In a fit of rage, Noah quits the league swearing off all fantasy except for standard redraft. Privately, he reveals to Jordan that he actually loved all the rule changes but ‘couldn’t handle losing to that narp.”
 - “Cal will lose the championship by less than half a point again this year.”
 - “Marcus executes zero trades in 2021.”
 - “Cody somehow manages to trade rape Markus and ends up riding that trade to a championship in his first year.”
 - “Somewhere between weeks 11 and 12, Cal has mysterious road to Damascus type conversion and embraces black QB’s whole-heartedly. The same week, Deshaun Watson is convicted of 27 rape charges and Lamar Jackson gets COVID for the 7th time.”
 - “Cody wins it all.”
 - “By week 8 Noah will have traded both of his RB’s and be in last place by the end of the season.”
 - “Cody takes it all, Cal sacks, and Derrick Henry has the greatest RB season ever in fantasy.”
 - “Justin Fields will make a solid entrance in Week 2 and by the end of the season he will push the Rancho Vista Ponies to playoff success.”
-

Meet the Chronicle’s Journalistic Staff for 2021

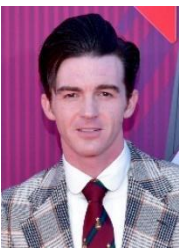

The Chronicle is one of the premier journalistic empires in fantasy sports. When other publications have chosen to take the road of safety and cliché, the Chronicle has taken leaps into the vast unknown of scandal, tragedy, and truth. Despite harsh criticism for its affiliation with the league office and rumors of self-proclaimed Publishing Tycoon Drew Gilmore playing the role of literary puppet master while shirking off Commissioner duties as his “side hustle”, the Chronicle has never been a more reliable and objective news outlet. Gilmore cleaned house in the offseason after the previous staff threatened to unionize and write more boldly about working conditions at Chronicle Corp., the publications parent company. This new staff has been conservatively compared to the likes of the early 10’s Miami Heat, and is considered by some to be more star-studded than Grown Ups 2. Without further ado, here are the bold and bright voices you’ll be hearing from in 2021:

Goldman Sacko – Sr. Editor

Goldman comes joins Chronicle after decades of prestigious experience writing for The Economist, Bloomberg, and r/wallstreetbets. He brings the sobriety and clarity you’d only hope to expect from a functioning adult, and his love of all things currency made him a shoe-in to cover the Scheiwe market manipulation story that he hopes to “blow the lid off of” in the coming weeks. When he’s not following up on a hot, steamy story, you can find him at his house watching “Boiler Room” and eating snacks. His journalistic aspirations include covering a blockbuster Rethwisch trade and not getting cancelled.

J.D. Bell – Jr. Editor

J.D. is a man of many talents and joins the Chronicle after spending years in the children’s entertainment industry. He became well known for his smooth demeanor and approachable sexy humor on a network show that will remain unnamed here due to ongoing legal disputes at Chronicle Corp. J.D. is excited to bring a fresh sense of style and intrigue to the Chronicle’s overall aesthetic. He hopes to draw in a more diverse crowd, pulling from his popularity at Teen Vogue and his connections in South America. His journalistic aspirations include uncovering the systemic power dynamics that led to Kamaragate and using his platform to land a guest role on iCarly.

Fart Staar – Opinion Columnist

Landing Fart Staar at the Chronicle was a big step in rebuilding the “trustworthy, objective voice” the Chronicle boasts of. Readers may recognize Staar as the first voice to publicly accuse Andrew Cuomo of sexual assault after Cuomo spanked him at a Quizno’s. Gilmore went after Staar after reading his incredible opinion work in the New York Post about his encounter with Cuomo (notable articles included “A Tree Spanks in Brooklyn”, “The Spy Who Spanked Me”, and “Red Cheek: A Story of a Governor’s Right Palm”). Staar looks to expand on his journalistic expertise at the Chronicle, though he is the first to admit he doesn’t know much about football but is also “deftly familiar with the art of fantasy”. His journalistic aspirations include criticizing league members and finding out how fantasy football works.